

Susan McGeown

Susan is a wife, mother, daughter, sister, friend, aunt, uncle (don't ask), teacher, author, managing member of a woman-owned small business ... but, most importantly, a "woman after God's own heart" (I Samuel 13:14). God has called her to be many things over the course of her life: a public-school teacher, a conference speaker, a Children's minister, a deacon, an elder, a vacation Bible school coordinator, a youth group leader, a preschool director, a Bible study leader ... and most recently a Master of Divinity student.

A shy introvert by nature, she is most comfortable hiding in her home office behind her large computer screen; however, she can be enticed to speak before even the largest groups simply by asking! She writes historical and contemporary fiction, nonfiction Bible studies and even a self-help book under her pseudonym Lee Brooks. Her conferences focus on biblical personalities and core spiritual themes all Christians can embrace, interspersed with laughter and her own personal testimony.

She lives in Bridgewater, New Jersey, with her husband of almost thirty years. While delighting in their four adult children, writing, researching and teaching is just about the best way she can spend her free time. Each of Sue's projects champions those emotions nearest and dearest to her: faith, joy, hope and love. Her goal in all things is to make God smile.
